12. Educational aims of the programme

The History with Politics course offers a wide range of undergraduate modules which can be broadly classified as covering British and Irish, European, and World history and politics. Modules in British and Irish history range from sixteenth and seventeenth century religious history, to eighteenth and nineteenth century Irish political history, to nineteenth and twentieth century social, political and women's/gendered history. In addition to general European and global history and politics, non-British modules offer detailed study of the history and politics of Germany, the USA and Japan. The History with Politics curriculum, therefore, conforms to national benchmark recommendations that students study the history and politics of more than one society or culture, study the subject over an extended period of historical time, and are introduced to diverse histories and political cultures and systems.

Mandatory elements at Level 4 provide students with a broad introduction to the wide variety of debates and approaches to historical and political study. Level 5 modules are designed to allow students to focus more closely on a range of historical and politics topics, covering British, non-British, European, modern and early modern themes. Level 6 modules are designed to give students the opportunity to study in greater depth aspects of topics encountered at Levels 4 and 5. Such modules are, therefore, more specialised either chronologically or thematically. Finally, the two-module equivalent dissertation gives students the opportunity to explore in detail a topic of their own choice and to demonstrate skills working independently (with appropriate one to one supervision).

Assessment strategies at each Level are designed to encourage increasing autonomy on the part of students. Thus, at Level 4 students are given considerable structured tutor support and guidance in preparing assessments (e.g. detailed written guidance, specific sessions on types of assessment, timetabled assessment-based tutorials, annotated bibliographies, etc.). At level 5 some structured tutor support continues (e.g. written guidance about how to approach a particular exercise, timetabled assessment-based tutorials, annotated bibliographies, etc.), but students will be expected to take increasingly more responsibility for their own learning. At Level 6 formal structured support is minimal, the expectation being that students should work essentially independently. All Level 6 modules allow students the opportunity to negotiate at least part of their diet of assessment (e.g. by devising an individual essay topic in consultation with the tutor).

Teaching strategies at each level also reflect the team's expectation that students should take more responsibility for their own learning as they progress through the programme. The number of lead lectures, for example, progressively declines at Levels 4, 5 and 6. Similarly seminars become progressively more student-centred at successive levels.

The course aims are to:

- support students to engage in personal development planning throughout the programme;
- foster an understanding of those skills associated with the search for historical and political evidence, the establishment of relevance, the organisation of information and the confidence to challenge hypotheses, the formulation of historical and political arguments, the analysis of historical and political controversies and the data on which they are based;
- enable students to undertake independent research in a range of areas;
- induce an appreciation of the concepts of anachronism and historical and political imagination and an awareness of the social function of the historian and/or political scientist;
- encourage and provide opportunities for co-operative work;
- promote an awareness of the essentially contested nature of historical and political knowledge;
- encourage the development of a range of subject-specific and transferable skills and qualities (e.g. in research, analysis and communication) which support students in academic study, graduate employment and/or postgraduate study;
- encourage student reflection on their own learning and enable them to become autonomous learners.

Learning, teaching and assessment

Modules are delivered through a combination of lectures, seminars, workshops, tutorials and directed learning. Lectures introduce students to the relevant historiography and/or political research/data and identify appropriate learning materials. Seminars encourage students to discuss their views on topics introduced in lectures, supplemented by the additional research they have undertaken. Staff are available throughout the semester for individual tutorials.

Assessment takes a variety of forms - essays, document analyses, oral presentations, book, article and film reviews, portfolios, examinations, research proposals, projects, reports, and a dissertation. Assessments are carefully devised to provide students with the opportunity to practise and improve a range of skills in written and oral communication, digital literacy, research and analysis, and presentation.

Teaching

Modules are delivered through a combination of lectures, seminars, workshops, tutorials and directed learning. Lectures introduce students to the relevant historiography and/or political research/data and identify appropriate learning materials. Seminars encourage students to discuss their views on topics introduced in lectures, supplemented by the additional research they have undertaken.

In addition, meetings with personal academic tutors are scheduled on at least four occasions in the first year and three occasions in each of the other years of the course.

The History with Politics work project module offers students the opportunity to gain work experience with a range of local employers including the George Marshall Medical Museum, Mercian Regimental Museum, the Commandery, Hartlebury Castle, Worcestershire Yeomanry Museum and the Archive and Archaeology Service at the Hive. Moreover, the Politics team enjoys links with local councillors, MPs, and parties. In the past, students have gained valuable work experience across a range of political parties and campaigns, including working at a local level with the Labour, Lib Dem, Green, and Conservative parties, campaigning in the last General Election, and more generally helping MPs on a day-to-day basis in their constituency offices and Parliament.

Contact time

Modules normally involve three contact hours of teaching per week. Thus at Levels 4 and 5 total weekly contact time is a maximum of 12 hours and 9 hours at Level 6.

The nature of the weekly class contact time will depend upon the teaching strategies of the optional modules chosen. Typically, however, students could expect to experience:

- 8 hours lectures/workshops
- 4 hours seminars

Independent self-study

In addition to the contact time, students are expected to undertake around 25 hours of personal self-study per week. Typically, this will involve directed reading in preparation for the following week's seminars and independent researching and writing upcoming assessments.

Independent learning is supported by a range of excellent learning facilities, including the Hive and library resources, the virtual learning environment, and extensive electronic learning resources.

Teaching staff

Students will be taught by a teaching team whose expertise and knowledge are closely matched to the content of the modules on the course.

<https://www.worcester.ac.uk/about/academic-schools/school-of-humanities/humanities-staff-profiles.aspx>

Teaching is informed by research and consultancy. All lecturers on the course have PhDs and a higher education teaching qualification or are Fellows of the Higher Education Academy.

Assessment

The course provides opportunities to test understanding and learning informally through the completion of practice or 'formative' assignments. Each module has one or more formal or 'summative' assessments which are graded and count towards the overall module grade.

Assessment takes a variety of forms - essays, document analyses, oral presentations, book, article and film reviews, blogs, portfolios, examinations, research proposals, projects and independent study/dissertation. Assessments are carefully devised to provide students with the opportunity to practise and improve a range of skills in written and oral communication, research and analysis, and presentation.

The precise assessment requirements for an individual student in an academic year will vary according to the mandatory and optional modules taken, but a typical formal summative assessment pattern for each year of the course is:

Year 1

- 3 document analyses
- 3 essays
- 1 article summary
- 1 examination
- 1 discussion paper
- 1 portfolio
- 2 reports

Year 2

- 3 essays
- 1 political discourse analysis
- 1 book review
- 1 document analysis
- 1 examinations
- 2 presentations
- 1 research proposal
- 2 reports
- 1 blog entry

Year 3

- 1 dissertation
- 5 essays
- 1 political discourse analysis
- 1 seminar presentation
- 1 article review
- 3 document analyses

1 blog post
1 examination

Students will receive feedback on practice (formative) assessments and on formal (summative) assessments undertaken by coursework. Feedback on examination performance is available upon request from the module leader. Feedback is intended to support learning and students are encouraged to discuss it with Personal Academic Tutors and module tutors as appropriate.

We aim to provide students with feedback on formal course work assessments within 20 working days of hand-in.

14. Assessment strategy

A variety of assessment strategies is consciously utilised in order to provide the opportunity for students to acquire as wide a range of transferable skills as possible. Assessments include essays, document analysis, oral presentations, in-class tests, literature reviews, portfolios of work, reports, examinations and research projects.

Progression on the part of students is encouraged by differentiated levels of tutor support between levels 4, 5 and 6. At Level 4, students are given considerable structured tutor support, at Level 5 students are encouraged to become more independent learners in preparation for the Dissertation and more research focussed teaching at Level 6. Word limits on assessment increases at each level of study. Mandatory modules at all levels include an explicit element of formative assessment and opportunities for a range of formative feedback are incorporated in all modules.

Advice about assignments is presented in the module outline at the commencement of each module and full direction is given within the context of teaching sessions. Teaching, group tasks and workshops are also designed to provide formative opportunities to develop the skills, competencies and understanding that will be demonstrated in the summative assessment tasks.

Staff feedback is given electronically with additional feedback, oral or annotated on the submitted work. On the return of work, students are encouraged to discuss feedback with tutors.

15. Programme structures and requirements

The award map is available at Appendix 1.

16. QAA and professional academic standards and quality

This award is located at Level 6 of the OfS sector recognised standards. The curriculum and the learning, teaching and assessment strategies of the History undergraduate programme have been designed to align with the History and Politics Subject Benchmark Statements and the QAA Quality Code.

The curriculum conforms to the QAA criteria for content and approach in designing a programme of undergraduate study for History. Time depth is secured by covering periods from the sixteenth to the twentieth century. Geographical range is offered by the inclusion of modules on, for example, the history of Britain, Europe, Japan and the USA. The design of assessments ensures that students both engage in the study of contemporary sources and develop critical awareness. The curriculum is designed to ensure that students encounter a diversity of specialisms in social, political, gender, and cultural history. All History with Politics students produce an extended piece of written work in the form of an 8,000 word dissertation in their final year. Similarly, the curriculum is in line with the QAA Benchmark Statements for Politics in that the modules demonstrate 'the breadth and diversity of politics and international relations.' This is secured by analysing politics, political philosophy, and movements in the UK, U.S., Europe, China, Israel, Russia, etc., as well as by focusing down on identity politics, diverse political campaigns, and populist and anti-establishment politics. Moreover, 'the nature and extent of politics and international relations' is covered through in-depth analysis of diverse Westminster, European and global political systems, constitutional, domestic and foreign policy considerations, and associated political parties in the context of political research and extant statistical data. Politics modules compliment the History curriculum by helping students apply research approaches associated with the study of History to 'core knowledge' and scholarship indicative of Politics and International Relations.

17. Support for students

The History with Politics Course Team is committed to ensuring that all students are given consideration and support throughout their time at the University of Worcester.

Student's transition into University life is assisted by an initial short, one week's induction programme which through a range of activities introduces students to their course, the staff who will be teaching them and the School. Students are, for example, invited to attend the School of Humanities Welcome Party in induction week.

During this initial induction week, students are involved in a range of activities which support them in developing an understanding of the expectations of their course, undergraduate study and the University's systems and services (eg. Firstpoint, Library, IT, Careers, Counselling Services).

<https://it.wp.worc.ac.uk/>

All students are allocated a Personal Academic Tutor who will advise them on issues related to their course throughout their study at the University and who monitors their progress. Personal Academic Tutor sessions usually take one of two forms: either one-to-one sessions where notes are taken and stored on SOLE, or group based sessions where general points and issues relating to the course are dealt with. Students are invited to meet their Personal Academic Tutor four times per year in year one and three times per year in years two and three. <https://www2.worc.ac.uk/pat/>

The student-run History Society also organises events which support first year students in the transition to university.

Staff teaching students on modules support students through one-to-one and small group tutorials and provide students with information on how to arrange such tutorials in module outlines. Tutorials may be face-to-face or online.

Students are further supported through a range of online support, most commonly via email. All modules are supported through the virtual learning environment accessed through Blackboard. The Course Handbook is also available online. Generic information and support materials are made available via a course Blackboard site.

Furthermore, the course team liaises with a range of centrally provided support services to ensure that students access all appropriate channels of support, these include for example:

- The Disability and Dyslexia Service offers specialist support on a one to one basis.
- Writing support from the Royal Literary Fund Writers in Residence.

- Writing support for international and students from the Centre for Academic English and Skills
- The Students' Union which as an independent charity is devoted to the educational interests and welfare of all students studying at the University and represents student views within the University.

20. Graduate destinations, employability and links with employers

Graduate destinations

History graduates from Worcester have progressed in recent years to a diverse range of careers, including accountancy, law, media, local government, police, retailing, administration, marketing, teaching and management. A growing number of graduates have embarked on postgraduate research in History both at the University of Worcester and at other universities. Several graduates have obtained employment as lecturers in higher education. Likewise, graduates also have a range of opportunities available to them that are associated with studies in Politics. The majority of graduates in this field go on to work in public services, management, pressure groups, voluntary organisations, charities, community work and consultancy, media, journalism, publishing, librarianship, advice work, research, and business (e.g. self-employment, management, administration, and marketing/public relations).

Student employability

The History with Politics programme has been designed in order to support students in the acquisition of a wide range of transferable skills (e.g. research and analytical, verbal and written communication, independent thinking, teamwork) which will serve them well in the world of employment. The course team includes a Careers Co-ordinator with responsibility for highlighting appropriate work opportunities and organising careers-focused events including talks by employers and graduates. Careers advice is also provided throughout students' period of study via personal academic tutorials. Students have the opportunity to acquire experience of the workplace through the Level 5 Work Experience module and through voluntary work with a range of local historical organisations including for example: The Worcestershire County Museum Service, Tudor House Museum, The George Marshall Medical Museum, Worcestershire Archives and Archaeological Service and The Worcestershire Regimental Museum. Moreover, students are encouraged to get involved in the Politics masterclass series to develop employability, digital literacy, and oral presentation skills; the masterclass series includes introductory and research-specific lectures, as well as opportunities for students to present on their own research-interests. The masterclasses are held at the Hive Studio, the St. John's

Campus, and online, and offer students the chance to publicly present on key political issues to fellow students, staff, and members of the public.

Links with employers

Students are encouraged to take up course related volunteering opportunities which are regularly advertised. The History work project module offers students the opportunity to gain work experience with a range of local employers including the George Marshall Medical Museum, Mercian Regimental Museum, the Commandery, Hartlebury Castle, Worcestershire Yeomanry Museum and the Archive and Archaeology Service at the Hive. Students are introduced to a number of these venues via field trips in the mandatory Level 4 module HIST1110. Moreover, the course team enjoys links with local councillors, MPs, and parties; in the past, students have gained valuable work experience across a range of political parties and campaigns, as well as working in local constituencies and Parliament.

Please note: This specification provides a concise summary of the main features of the programme and the learning outcomes that a typical student might reasonably be expected to achieve and demonstrate if s/he takes full advantage of the learning opportunities that are provided. More detailed information on the learning outcomes, content and teaching, learning and assessment methods of each module can be found in associated course documentation e.g. course handbooks, module outlines and module specifications.
