12. Educational aims of the programme

The course is an interesting and stimulating examination of political life. The Worcester course is distinctive, as it also includes political insights from History and Sociology, and is more engaging to students than any pre-conceptions about 'politics' might suggest. The course's main concern is not the mechanics of formal political procedures, but rather argument about matters of real significance to 'ordinary' citizens. In particular, it studies the broader forces ('power') which determine 'who gets what, where, when, and how' in society, and the wider social, economic and cultural contexts and impacts of political processes.

In summary, the aims of the Politics course are:

- To enable students to analyse the exercise of power within society, especially in relation to political activities and debates about 'governance', public policy, and the distribution of power and resources.
- To foster the use of explanatory and normative theory to evaluate interpretations of issues, events, values and ideas.

- To help students to apply the concepts and insights offered by the academic subject of Politics in order to interpret and evaluate a range of political phenomena and ideas.
- To draw insights from cognate academic disciplines to explore the historic, social, and cultural contexts of contemporary political phenomena.
- To provide students with a structured learning experience which combines the required breadth and progression of understanding with depth through opportunities to select modules in pursuit of coherent lines of enquiry.
- To develop in students cognitive, affective, personal and practical capacities as a sound basis for continued learning in their subsequent careers and for participation in the society/communities to which they belong.

Learning outcomes and combined subject degrees (joint, major and minor pathways):

- Joint Pathway
 Students following a joint pathway will have met the majority of the learning outcomes for the subject, although the range of knowledge and discipline specific understanding in terms of options or specialisms will be more restricted than for a single or major Honours student.

- Minor Pathway

Students following a minor pathway will have met some of the learning outcomes for the subject (as indicated by the modules studied), and will have focused the development of their knowledge, understanding and subject specific skills in particular aspects of the discipline.

Learning, teaching and assessment

The learning, teaching and assessment methods used on the course include the following features:

- Stimulating source material: The taught modules usually include some conventional lectures, to stimulate and motivate students and to guide them through subsequent general reading. However, the source material in modules is not confined to lectures, but includes structured and general reading, and in some modules video case studies, guest speakers, visits, observation or interviews.
- Active learning: The skills of analysis and evaluation are developed not by passive absorption of ideas, but by interactive strategies to ensure that students engage with the material - e.g. seminar discussions and team presentations, and sometimes other methods such as role-play. As well as cognitive skills, these also develop other important qualities such as inter-personal and communicative skills.
- Blended learning: Although all modules have class-based sessions, on-line learning is an important element of most of them. All modules have a Blackboard page, which students can use not only to access information, but also to interact with each other and with the tutor in collaborative learning. They can also access electronically an increasing range of library sources including an extensive range of journal articles.

14. Assessment strategy

- Assessment process: For each module they undertake, students receive a module outline detailing the assessment requirements: this lists the assessment criteria against which their work will be judged. The grade awarded is based on UW's standard grade descriptors.
- Variety of assessments: The assessments are designed not only to test students' learning, but also to be a vital part of the learning experience, and a range of assessment tasks and styles is used because the course's modules aim to develop a wide variety of skills. Students are assessed predominantly through individual written assignments, including not only the conventional forms of essay and seminar paper, but also other written forms (for example, briefing-papers). Students also experience assessment through such methods as oral presentations.
- Tests and examinations: Most modules in the course have forms of assessment other than tests or examinations. The Team strongly believes that this is justified: the other assessment methods have been selected to be rigorous enough to meet the main objectives claimed for test and exams, while testing a variety of skills which tests and exams cannot.
  - However, test or examination - type assessments form part of a small number of modules: these have a useful role in assessing certain kinds of material and also provide students with experience of having to perform under pressure and they are one way of verifying that students can show appropriate skills without relying on having texts to hand.
- Formative assessment: In line with the University's assessment policy, in all modules in the course there is one or more opportunity for students to try out their ideas and get some feedback on them, prior to submitting their assessment. This is done in various ways, including feedback on seminar presentations or discussions, and in tutorials. In some modules, students formally submit part of their assignment in draft.

- Prevention of plagiarism: Assignments on many of the modules have been designed so that there is reduced possibility of students plagiarising, either from fellow students or from the internet. Tutors also check rigorously for plagiarism. Some use of in-class tests (or exams) and/or tutor involvement at draft stage referred to above further add to the precautions against plagiarism.

15. Programme structures and requirements

The course is available to take as a full-time or part-time course. Students may combine their study of Politics with another subject in Joint or Major/Minor combination.

16. QAA and professional academic standards and quality

Although Politics is not a single honours course, we have taken care to ensure that it meets the relevant parts of the current QAA honours degree benchmark statement for Politics and International Relations \(2015\). The course handbook indicates how the points in it are addressed in the course. The award is located at level 6 of the Framework for higher education qualifications (FHEQ).

17. Support for students

The Politics Course Team is committed to ensuring that all students are given consideration and support throughout their time at the University of Worcester.

Students' transition into university life is assisted by an initial short, one week induction programme which, through a range of activities, introduces students to their course, the staff who will be teaching them, and the Institute. Students are, for example, invited to attend the IHCA Freshers' Party in Welcome Week.

During this initial Welcome Week, and in the first Worcester Week, students are involved in a range of activities which support them in developing an understanding of the expectations of their course, undergraduate study and the University's systems and services. They have talks or tours, for example, which introduce them to the Hive (i.e. the University's library), and IT facilities, Media Services, the Careers and the Counselling Service.

Students are also provided with a brief induction into their second and third year in the mandatory modules POLP2101 and POLP3103.

In addition, the Institute for Humanities and Creative Arts monitors attendance closely in the first year and provides support for students through the First Year Tutor system. This comprises dedicated members of staff who are available every day for drop-in sessions during the semester between 12:00 & 14:00 and provide on-line support all year round, replying to e-mails within 24 hours.

All students are allocated a Personal Academic Tutor, who will advise them on issues related to their course throughout their study at the University and who monitors their progress. Personal Academic Tutor sessions take two forms: one-to-one sessions where notes are taken and stored on SOLE, and group sessions in the mandatory modules where general points and issues relating to the course are dealt with. Students are invited to meet their Personal Academic Tutor twice a semester. In the event of extended absence of a student from Level 4 classes, the Personal Academic Tutor will be alerted and contact them directly to offer support.

Staff teaching students on modules support students through one-to-one and small group tutorials, and provide students with clear indications of times they will be available to see students; they do this either via notices on their office door, or via email or in module outlines.

Students are further supported through a range of on-line support, for example via email or Skype tutorials. All modules are supported through the virtual learning environment, Blackboard, and Course information is available via Blackboard too.

Furthermore, the Course Team liaises with a range of centrally provided support services to ensure that students access all appropriate channels of support, for example:

- The Disability and Dyslexia Service within Student Services offers specialist support on a one to one basis.
- Writing support from the Royal Literary Fund Writer in Residence.

- Writing support, for international and EU students, from the Language Centre.
- The Students' Union, which is an independent charity devoted to the educational interests and welfare of all students studying at the University, represents student views within the University.

20. Graduate destinations, employability and links with employers

Graduate destinations

Politics graduates from Worcester have progressed in recent years to a diverse range of careers. A growing number of graduates have embarked on postgraduate study. Of the most recent cohort of Politics graduates who responded to the UW graduate destination survey all were in employment.

National data shows that the career potential for graduates from Politics course is good. In addition to the transferable skills, employers in all sectors value students who have an understanding of complex political and cultural issues in continually changing environments, especially in jobs that involve working in or with public authorities. Graduates from the course are, therefore, particularly suited for employment in areas such as 'management', 'public affairs' or 'public services' or in areas, such as the media, where a knowledge of current affairs is desirable. Some relevant career destinations are shown below:

- Public services e.g. teaching (schools or colleges), police, probation, housing, civil service, local government and planning.
- Pressure groups, voluntary organisations, charities, community work and consultancy.
- Media, journalism, publishing, librarianship, advice work, research.
- Business e.g. self-employment, management, personnel, administration and marketing/public relations.
- Further study in politics, or subjects such as journalism, social policy and law.

Student employability

It is a guiding principle of the course to design the programme systematically to enable students to develop a range of key transferable skills to support their employability. Skills in research, critical analysis, verbal and written communication, independent thinking and teamwork are especially emphasised in learning and teaching and assessment strategies and in module learning outcomes.

Careers advice is provided throughout students' period of study. The importance of career planning is emphasised in Personal Academic Tutorials and in relevant Worcester Weeks events. The university Careers Service and Students' Union also provide further specialist guidance.

Students have the opportunity to take a Work Placement module at Level 5. Students are also informed of relevant paid and voluntary work opportunities. Through voluntary work and the Work Experience module students thus have the opportunity to acquire invaluable experience of the workplace with a range of relevant local organizations.

Links with employers

The University of Worcester Politics team and the other subject teams, which contribute to this course, have links with a range of employers and public bodies (such as local councils and media organisations) in the immediate locality and in the West Midlands region.

Please note: This specification provides a concise summary of the main features of the programme and the learning outcomes that a typical student might reasonably be expected to achieve and demonstrate if s/he takes full advantage of the learning opportunities that are provided. More detailed information on the learning outcomes, content and teaching, learning and assessment methods of each module can be found in associated course documentation e.g. course handbooks, module outlines and module specifications.
