12. Educational aims of the programme

Sociology with Politics at University of Worcester provides a dynamic and unique focus on contemporary sociological and political perspectives, research, and challenges, with particular emphasis on work-based learning and the development of graduate employability skills. The Sociology with Politics course is rooted in contemporary Sociology and Politics, including Digital Sociology, Environmental Sociology, Sociology of Health, Sociology of Emotions, and Political Sociology. Sociology with Politics students at University of Worcester will be able to approach the foundational origins of Sociology critically and will also have the opportunity to study Sociology of the Family, Sociology of Crime, Sociology of Religion, Sociology of Knowledge, Sociology of Education, Sociology of "Race," and Sociology of Gender (and sexuality). The Sociology with Politics course also aims to enhance students' knowledge of contemporary politics by contextualising their studies within a wider focus on Westminster, European, and global political philosophies, systems, and challenges.

Sociology with Politics students are encouraged to consider what it means to be a sociologist from the outset of the course, beginning with the first-year (Level 4) module, Sociology in Practice. In taking the module, students will begin to plan their learner journey, learn about research in Sociology and what it means to be socially responsible, and begin to identify a career pathway in preparation for second year (Level 5). In second year, students will study Sociology: from Origins to Present and critically trace the origins of Sociology as a discipline. In doing so, students will learn new perspectives in contemporary Sociology, and in combining this with the Practical Research in Sociology module, apply them to a research area of their own choosing, or in the case of the Work Project module, to the workplace. These modules prepare students to conduct their own sociological/political research in the Dissertation module in third-year. Alongside the Sociology modules, students will complete thirty credits of Politics modules each year: Westminster Politics (Level 4), European Politics (Level 5), and Global Politics (Level 6). In addition, with the support of the University of Worcester's Careers & Employability Service, students will develop and build their transferable graduate attributes and employability skills, preparing them as graduates for digital citizenship and a range of career and postgraduate options, including UW's Sociology Master by Research (MRes).

In particular, the Sociology with Politics programme aims to:

1. Enable students to critically approach Sociology and Politics as disciplines in considering new and diverse methodological, theoretical, and research perspectives and their relation to contemporary areas of sociological and political concern.
2. Ensure graduates understand how to apply theoretical, methodological, and research perspectives to the social and political world, complex social/political processes, and the social construction of identity in different contexts, particularly in relation to intersectionality, diversity, and inequality.
3. Enable students to develop evidence-based arguments that can draw on, and synthesise, a diverse range of primary, qualitative, and quantitative data sources.
4. Empower graduates to critically challenge common sense and taken-for-granted knowledges, systems of "power" and structural discrimination and how they can underpin social/political interaction, as well as historical and extant patterns of inequality.
5. Provide students with opportunities to map their learner journey, undertake work-based learning, develop UW Graduate Attributes, including social/political responsibility, reflective and resilient lifelong learning, digital citizenship, problem solving, teamwork and effective communication, and transferable employability skills, and prepare for a career in an area applicable to the sociological and/or political insights acquired in the Sociology with Politics course.

Learning, teaching and assessment

The UW Sociology with Politics degree course puts student-led learning at the centre of learning and teaching sessions, formative and summative assessments. In each Sociology and Politics module, students are scaffolded in preparing their assignments with a range of formative assessment opportunities, regular assignment guidance sessions and workshops, and tutorials. Sociology with Politics sessions introduce students to sociological research, methodologies, and theories through short interactive lectures. In seminar and workshops, students then conceptualise what they have learnt by applying lecture content to the social/political world and areas of topical sociological and/or political concern. In doing so, each Sociology with Politics module supports students in identifying assignment topics and research/methodological approaches. There are no exams in SOCG or POLP-coded modules, instead, each of the modules provides students with opportunities to develop their own assessment focus within the context of the specific learning objectives.

Teaching

Sociology with Politics students are taught through a combination of short, interactive lectures, and student-led seminars and workshops. In the process, students are supported in developing critical research, methodological, and data analysis skills. Taught sessions encourage students to think reflexively in critically approaching the disciplines, their traditions, and perspectives, with particular focus on identifying new, diverse, and exciting research in analysing contemporary areas of sociological and political concern. Moreover, teaching in Sociology with Politics, along with personal academic tutor and academic liaison librarian support, puts digital literacy, citizenship, and sustainable development at the centre of the student experience, helping students to develop graduate attributes, transferable employability skills, and digital competencies in thinking ahead to further study or graduate employment. Indeed, in empowering students to develop their own independent learning and research skills in the context of UW's Graduate Attributes, the Sociology with Politics team hope to prepare our graduates for lifelong learning and future graduate employment. Sociology with Politics graduates will thus be globally and socially responsible, culturally aware, and understand the ethical impact of their decisions. In this way, we aim to ensure our graduates help transform communities and society for the better.

Contact time

In a typical week students will have around 12 contact hours of teaching. The precise contact hours will depend on the optional modules selected and in the final year students will normally have slightly less contact time in order to do more independent study. However, in the final year (Level 6) students will have further support from their dissertation supervisor as well as the continued support of their personal academic tutor (PAT). Typically, weekly contact time will be structured around 4 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars/workshops.

Independent self-study

In addition to contact time students are expected to undertake around 25 hours of personal self-study per week. Typically, this will involve completing online activities, reading journal articles and books, working on individual and group projects, undertaking research in the library and online, and preparing assignments. Independent learning is supported by Library Services, Blackboard, and IT at University of Worcester.

Teaching staff

Students will be taught by a team of academics whose expertise and knowledge are closely matched to the content of the modules on the course. All permanent staff on the Sociology with Politics team are Fellows of the Higher Education Academy. As a requirement, new permanent Sociology staff will either already have, or be working towards, HEA fellowship or the PG Certificate in Higher Education.

Assessment

Each Sociology with Politics module includes a range of formative ("practice") and summative (formally graded) assessment opportunities. Assessments include essays, reports, discussion papers, discourse analyses, book reviews, PowerPoint, and poster presentations, etc. The precise assessment requirements for an individual student in an academic year will vary according to the mandatory and optional modules taken, but a typical formal summative assessment pattern for each year of the Sociology with Politics course is:

Year 1:

2 Reports
Reflective autobiography

Year 3:

14. Assessment strategy

The Sociology with Politics assessment strategy is based on the University Assessment Policy. Assessment in Sociology with Politics takes as its starting point the British Sociological Association's (BSA) "skills" set that requires students to be "critical thinker[s]," which in turn will make students more "marketable" when it comes to graduate employment (BSA, Discover Sociology). The Sociology with Politics curriculum links the latter premises with UW's Graduate Attributes to support students in becoming analytical, creative, problem solving, but also socially/politically responsible and critically reflective lifelong learners. Indeed, in empowering students to develop their own independent learning and research skills in the context of UW's Graduate Attributes, the Sociology with Politics team hopes to support graduates in becoming globally responsible, culturally aware, and attuned to the ethical impact of their decisions. In this way, we aim to ensure our graduates help transform communities and society for the better. The Sociology and Politics grade descriptors support development towards these attributes across Levels 4 to 6, particularly in relation to the development of evidenced-based arguments. At Level 4 (based on the Sociology grade descriptors), assessments require that students aspire to demonstrate "evidence of a sustained, logical and well-substantiated argument, through effective synthesis of materials and insightful analysis"; at Level 5, assessments should aim to exhibit "significant ability to construct and sustain evidence-based arguments through excellent synthesis and critical interpretation of scholarly sociological sources and/or primary evidence"; and lastly, at Level 6, the culmination of the undergraduate learner journey, students must devise an "excellent constructed and substantiated argument, clearly explaining and synthesising complex ideas, viewpoints, and evidence to put together an outstanding analysis with well-developed reasoned judgement."

At Level 4 (first-year) Sociology with Politics students are given the opportunity early on to complete formative assessments in each of the mandatory Sociology with Politics modules. This enables them to practice writing, research and referencing skills in a supportive environment, with feedback providing encouragement and signposting towards appropriate support and Study Skills resources. In Sociology in Practice students complete a summative reflective autobiography, which asks them to plan their learner journey in Sociology with Politics and to identify an area of research interest and targeted career pathway. This module and its assessment supports students in beginning their undergraduate learner journey, understanding what it means to be socially and politically responsible, and in developing graduate attributes and transferable employability skills. Similarly, Sociology: Approaching the Crisis includes a study-trip assessment based on a long-running annual visit to Parliament (London), which asks students to reflect on their trip and identify a House of Commons Library research briefing in analysing a contemporary crisis of sociological and/or political relevance. This assessment complements students' study in the module, Westminster Politics.

Level 4 assessments prepare students for Level 5 (second-year) and maintain the course's focus on work-based learning, social/political responsibility, graduate attributes, and transferable skills. Indeed, the Sociology Work Project module enables students to gain valuable work experience in the context of Sociology of Work and political perspectives. Similarly, Practical Research in Sociology requires students to present a report (assignment 2) on their research topic as if written for a local or national organisation using extant data sources. This module also prepares students for Level 6 and the completion of the Dissertation by scaffolding them in identifying a diverse range of contemporary research, theoretical, and methodological perspectives, conducting effective literature searches, and in identifying reviewing and synthesising strategies. Most importantly, Practical Research in Sociology and the module, European Politics, support students in preparing their dissertation proposal and identifying an appropriate supervisor to work with at Level 6.

The Dissertation module at Level 6 (third-year) is an opportunity for students to develop their own research specialisms in practical form, taking as their starting point the underlying principles of the Sociology with Politics course in terms of what it means to be a sociologist and in identifying new, diverse, and exciting methodological, theoretical, and research perspectives. Certainly, Level 6 assessments encourage students to showcase skills acquired at Level 5, particularly in relation to the development of evidence-based arguments and the synthesis of a diverse range of source materials. In particular, students will be able to do this in Sociology of Religion's first assignment, the annotated bibliography, in Global Power: Sociological Perspectives with the comparative case study report, and in Education and the Sociological Imagination with the combined essay and poster presentation. Similarly, in Global Politics students will be asked to write a political research briefing structured in the style of a parliamentary briefing paper that critically overviews a specific example of transnational identity politics.

In sum, the Sociology with Politics assessment strategy supports students in developing their writing, research, and analytical skills, particularly in relation to students being able to construct and sustain evidence-based arguments. This a transferable employability skill at the root of UW's Graduate Attributes that all Sociology with Politics students can take into the workplace – the ability to deploy evaluative skills to investigate problems and propose viable solutions in a socially responsible way.

16. QAA and professional academic standards and quality

This award is located at Level 6 of the OfS' Sector-Recognised Standards. The educational aims of the programme and its learning outcomes have been designed in accordance with the QAA "Subject Benchmark Statement" for "Sociology" (2019) and the QAA "Subject Benchmark Statement" for "Politics and International Relations" (2023).

17. Support for students

The Sociology with Politics course, in supporting its staff and students, takes as its starting point UW's Inclusion Toolkit and its commitment to "embedding inclusion across all aspects of learning and teaching." Indeed, at Level 4 students are supported by an induction and drop-in session, the Sociology course Blackboard site, as well as with an initial meeting with their Personal Academic Tutor (PAT) and the Sociology Course Leader (both roles include the monitoring of student attendance). Moreover, students have the opportunity in their first week to engage in a range of social activities to make new friends on the course, including at the Humanities' welcome party and at the Sociology and Sociology with Politics quiz and social (which normally runs three times across the academic year). As part of induction week, students are also introduced to Library Services, the Careers & Employability Service, DDS, IT, the Counselling team, and Firstpoint. When teaching begins the following week, the Level 4 module, Sociology in Practice, sets students on their learning journey (based on Library Services' Learner Journeys Toolkit).

Sociology with Politics' PAT system is based on UW's Personal Academic Tutoring Policy and its remit "in supporting students' academic and personal experience of studying at the University of Worcester, and working in partnership with them to fulfil their potential." Students on the Sociology with Politics course can expect a minimum of four meetings in their first year and three meetings in the second and third years of study. At a modular level, students are supported by module Blackboard sites and their module tutors. Students can request regular meetings to discuss assessments, their progress, and current research. The Sociology with Politics team equally encourages students to seek support and close working relationships with the Careers & Employability team, the Academic Liaison Librarians for the School of Humanities, and Library Services more generally, including the latter's Study Happy, Study Skills, and Referencing resources.

20. Graduate destinations, employability and links with employers

Graduate destinations

According to 2022 Discover Uni data, “80%” of UW Sociology graduates are in “work” or “study” fifteen months after completing their course, with “80%” of the latter figure “in highly skilled work” and stating that “my current work fits with my future plans”; broken down even further, 35% of those graduates in “highly skilled” employment identified as “teaching professionals.” Moreover, “70%” of “graduates find their current work meaningful.” Indeed, Sociology with Politics graduates enjoy a range of long-term career options, including in education, politics, the probation service, youth and social work, the caring professions, the police, business and personnel management, administration, public relations, media, and marketing. Alternatively, some Sociology with Politics graduates go on to further study, including UW's Sociology MRes.

Student employability

Career planning begins from the outset of the Sociology with Politics course with the Sociology in Practice module, the summative assessment for which, a reflective autobiography, asks students to think about their learner journey and to identify a targeted career pathway. Consequently, students enjoy regular opportunities to build their graduate attributes through work-based learning, close tutor guidance and support, and regular access to the UW Careers & Employability Service, with the latter delivering Sociology/Politics-specific sessions across Levels 4-6. In completing their degree, students develop digital literacy, independent research and data analysis skills, communication skills through a range of written and oral assessments, work-based learning skills, such as through the Work Project module, as well as industry-specific skills in writing a report for an organisation in second year (in the Practical Research in Sociology module) and a research briefing in third-year. Moreover, based on UW's Graduate Attributes, the course encourages students to be socially responsible, to understand how education can contribute to sustainable development, and how as graduates they can help transform communities and society for the better.

Links with employers

The Sociology with Politics course embeds work-based learning opportunities, working closely with UW Library Services, the local council in Worcester (the latter two being popular sites for work placements and experience in recent years), local schools and colleges through the Sociology database and Twitter account, alumni network, the voluntary and charity sectors, local and national organisations, government, and Parliament. Indeed, in recent years several Sociology and Sociology with Politics students have gained valuable work experience in constituency offices and Parliament in Westminster. The Sociology with Politics team is committed to the British Sociological Association's (BSA) aim of promoting Sociology as a discipline and its emphasis on "Sociologist Careers," using BSA materials in the modules, particularly in promoting work-based learning, research, and networking opportunities, and in Open and Applicant Days (making use of BSA leaflets, such as Discover Sociology and Speak up for Sociology). The Sociology with Politics curriculum aims to produce graduates who are "marketable" in terms of "communication," "interpersonal," "analytical," and data interpretation skills, "cross-cultural" competencies, and potential for "leadership" (BSA, Discover Sociology, p. 7). Moreover, alongside UW's Graduate Attributes, the Sociology with Politics team utilises the QAA's "Subject Benchmark Statement" for "Sociology" (2019) and its guidance on "Employability," elements of which are incorporated into Open Day and induction materials, as well as the QAA's "Subject Benchmark Statement" for "Politics and International Relations" (2023).

Please note: this specification provides a concise summary of the main features of the programme and the learning outcomes that a typical student might reasonably be expected to achieve and demonstrate if they take full advantage of the learning opportunities that are provided. More detailed information on the learning outcomes, content, and teaching, learning and assessment methods of each module can be found in associated course documentation, e.g. course handbooks, module guides and module specifications.
