

Internships & Work Experience

Why do work experience?

Work experience is a valuable way for students to develop a range of skills for future employment as a graduate. It can also help students to increase confidence, develop professional networks and even to discover a future career sector or job of interest.

A survey of major graduate recruiters* suggested that over a third of employers would expect graduates to have some kind of work experience.

What are internships?

An internship is usually a more structured form of work experience in a particular role with a significantly higher level of responsibility and involvement.

Opportunities range from less than 4 weeks, Easter, summer or winter vacations, to placements of up to a year. Student internships tend to be shorter than graduate internships.

Internships may be paid or unpaid (which can be dependent on the career sector). They are usually offered by major graduate recruiters, smaller companies or community organisations and charities.

Internships with major graduate recruiters

Many of the major graduate recruiters see their summer and sandwich placement programmes as a good way to identify students for their graduate recruitment schemes. Most top recruiters offer paid work experience opportunities and indicated that 31% of their graduate schemes were filled by students and graduates who had already worked for them*.

There is fierce competition for these opportunities and the application process is often just as demanding as those for the graduate schemes. It may involve online aptitude tests, assessment centres and interviews. The application time frame is also similar to that of graduate schemes (approximately Sept – Nov/Dec for applications, Jan – April for interviews and assessment centres, June-Aug for starting an internship/summer placement)
